MESSAGE FROM OUR GLOBAL LEADERSHIP

Every child deserves to be loved and feel valued. To feel safe and protected. To learn and discover the wonderful world around them. To dream their future and reach it.

But the daily reality that millions of children face today is one that is limited by poverty, discrimination, and violence. And the compounding effects of economic instability, conflict, and climate change place children at increasing risk. Too many are forced to learn in unsafe or overcrowded environments or to leave school entirely, forced into early marriage, and forced from their homes and the people and places they love.

When everything around them looks like a roadblock and every word sounds like “Give up,” we are there to say: “Keep going.”

In this report, you’ll learn how our teams in 21 countries mobilized last year to keep millions of children in school and learning, to encourage them to believe in themselves and develop the skills they need to thrive, to help them cope with trauma, and to create enabling environments for generations to come. We did it using children’s language – play.

The results are significant: stronger parent-child bonds in Uganda and Tanzania, more inclusive classrooms in Burundi that meet the needs of children with disabilities, stronger literacy skills in Ethiopia, more children in Lebanon with support to cope with displacement, and more girls in Senegal with the chance to pursue their dreams.

This important work was possible thanks to our generous donors, whose unflagging commitment to children made it possible for us to respond to their changing needs during these uncertain times. We also thank our staff, who not only served children but also contributed the ideas and commitment that inspired our new 2024–26 Strategic Plan, a strategy that will see us deepen and scale our impact; build a more responsive and resilient organization, and contribute to the growing body of evidence that play is key to supporting children’s learning and well-being.

We hope you will be inspired by what you read in this report and feel, as we do, ever more committed to protecting, educating, and empowering children to rise above adversity through the power of play. We are proud and grateful to have you by our side, and we thank you for your generous support.

MESSAGES FROM OUR NATIONAL OFFICE

As the National Director of Right to Play USA, I'm proud to share our remarkable progress in 2023. Your unwavering support has made this year transformative, helping us heighten awareness, secure crucial resources, and strengthen our international NGO standing.

Our promotion of play-based learning reached new heights through strategic partnerships, dynamic campaigns, and extensive community outreach. We engaged thousands of new supporters via social media, sharing inspiring stories from the children and communities we serve.

Play helps children understand the world, articulate their dreams, and develop into adulthood. Yet, many lack opportunities due to unsafe spaces, limited time, and undervaluing of play's importance. As more children face conflict, crisis, and learning loss, protecting play is more urgent than ever.

In 2023, we launched impactful campaigns like "Let Her Play," emphasizing the importance of empowering girls. Our participation in key events like the UN General Assembly established Right to Play as a leader in addressing critical issues.

Our fundraising efforts thrived, raising substantial funds to support programs in 15 countries, impacting over 5 million children. Every child deserves to feel loved, valued, and safe. Right to Play empowers children to recognize their potential, build supportive relationships, and create fun, equitable learning environments.

In 2023, millions of vulnerable children faced overwhelming challenges from conflict, economic hardships, and climate change. At Right To Play, we are dedicated to making a difference by providing essential resources, mentorship, and safe spaces for children to play, helping them overcome obstacles and flourish.

To support our mission, we expanded our global reach and attracted necessary resources. In the USA, we set ambitious goals and grew our community of supporters, including our exceptional Board and dedicated staff.

Our 2023 Gala was a testament to our efforts, raising over $1.3 million with the help of honoree Gaby Abdelnour, his family, friends, and colleagues. The Gala was not just a fundraiser but a launchpad for our strategy to spread Right To Play's mission further.

In 2023, our programs impacted over 5.5 million children, with 49% being girls. We reached 81,000 refugee children in 84 camps and equipped 150,000 educators and coaches to support children's learning and well-being. These numbers reflect our collective impact and the powerful difference we make together.

I extend my heartfelt gratitude to our supporters, my fellow board members, and our outstanding US team led by National Director Rosemary Trent. Together, we met the challenges of 2023 and set a course for even greater achievements in 2024.

EARLY CHILDHOOD CARE AND EDUCATION

We promoted positive attitudes toward early education, equipping caregivers and kindergarten teachers with play-based tools to support children's holistic development and foundational learning.

Putting play therapy skills in the hands of parents in Tanzania and Uganda

12,500 young children in Tanzania and Uganda have more positive relationships with their parents and are more ready to learn, thanks to Play to Grow, a pilot project developed with the support of the LEGO Foundation. The project supported 3,100 parents to use play to strengthen bonds with their children and support their socio-emotional, educational, and developmental needs through skills like letting the child lead in play, reflecting feelings, giving choices, and encouraging efforts. In Tanzania, the percentage of caregivers who reported observing positive socio-emotional skills and behaviour in their children increased from 39% at the start of the project to 64% at the end. In Uganda, parents reported a similar increase, from 21% to 46%.

We'll build on the successful pilot in 2024 with Play to Grow Flex, a version of the program adapted to meet the needs of parents and children who have experienced trauma and are living in crisis settings and fragile contexts, such as refugee and host communities.

Early Childhood Development Centres support children affected by displacement in Uganda

More children in refugee and host communities in Isingiro District accessed early childhood education and development, thanks to community mobilization activities that were offered with support from Education Cannot Wait. Our teams promoted positive attitudes toward education through radio, door-to-door campaigns, and parent meetings, and encouraged 1,400 children to enroll in ECE centres – a 34% increase over previous years. 56% of newly enrolled learners were girls.

“For children, developmentally, play is their language. These hands-on sessions help parents connect with their children through play.”

– Dr. Deborah Ojiambo, PhD, NCC, Professor at Makerere University, Kampala, Uganda; Director, Safe Haven Child and Family Counselling Centre; Play to Grow project advisor

Equipping kindergarten teachers to support early learning in Ghana

48,000 kindergarten teachers received high-quality teacher training from Right To Play, thanks to support from the LEGO Foundation, Sabre Education, Innovations for Poverty Action, and the Ministry of Education. We trained teachers in how to deliver the national kindergarten curriculum to 1.2 million learners in 24,000 public schools, using playful activities like alphabet hopscotch, which helps children learn their letters, and games that teach numeracy and socio-emotional skills.

PRIMARY EDUCATION

Our play-based projects supported school-aged children to return to school, improve their literacy skills, and perform better academically, laying a foundation for success in school and life.

Back-to-school campaign shifts attitudes toward education in Burundi

Thanks to awareness-building and re-enrollment campaigns led by Girls' Clubs, Coaches, and educational staff in Ruyigi Province, 461 out-of-school children returned to education. The area is home to a high population of returnees, and only 49% of children are enrolled in school. With support from Global Affairs Canada through the My Education, My Future project, our staff used outreach activities such as home visits and dramas to bring children back to the classroom.

Improving children's reading proficiency in Ethiopia

Children in Grades 1 to 4 who struggle with literacy accessed additional support at Reading Centres through a project supported by the Norwegian agency for development cooperation (Norad). Without a firm foundation in core reading skills, children struggle to remain in school and succeed. In the Reading Centres, facilitators and Junior Leaders supported 1,100 primary students to improve their literacy skills by singing songs, reading stories, journaling, and playing games that reinforce reading skills. Today, 47.5% of Grade 4 children participating in the program are reading at grade-appropriate comprehension, up from 9.3% at the start of the project.

Remedial classes support children affected by learning loss in Jordan

Primary students improved their comprehension of core subjects, thanks to weekly remedial classes where teachers used play to make lessons accessible and engaging. Students in Jordan are still experiencing learning loss caused by pandemic-related school closures. After participating in the classes, which are supported by the Walter Haefner Foundation, 78% of students saw improved grades across math, science, Arabic, and English.

Facilitating learning between Education Ministries in Ghana and Sierra Leone

Right To Play Ghana hosted a bilateral exchange with the Honourable Dr. Yaw Osei Adutwum, Minister of Education for the Republic of Ghana, and the Honourable Dr. David Moinina Senggeh, Minister of Education for the Republic of Sierra Leone. The exchange created space for the Ministers and education officials from both countries to share opportunities to strengthen education systems and ensure that all children can access quality education and achieve strong learning outcomes.

In their discussions, the Ministers explored how integrating play-based learning across the different levels of education systems can accelerate learning outcomes and encourage holistic skills development. They looked at examples of how Ghana's partnership with Right To Play has helped strengthen teachers' skills and the delivery of competency-based curriculum to millions of learners.

PRIMARY EDUCATION

“As displaced people, we are more aware of the difficulties that our children are facing, and it’s our duty and obligation to guarantee them a future.”

– Aminata Ongoiba, President of the Grassroots Community Organization of Displaced People, a Right To Play partner organization in Mali

Creating child-friendly learning environments in Pakistan

1,500 out-of-school children in Karachi enrolled in non-formal education centres that support learning and life-skills development for disadvantaged youth, thanks to efforts by Right To Play-trained teachers and coaches. More than 28 million children in Pakistan do not go to school, many of them girls. In the centres, educators use play-based learning activities to help children in underserved communities develop positive associations with school and return to learning.

98% of Grade 4 children we worked with in Tanzania are reading at a grade-appropriate level, up from 77% at the start of the project.

Partnering with community-based organizations to address educational barriers in Mali

More than 37,000 conflict-affected children have better access to quality education, thanks to EMPOWER, a new project supported by Global Affairs Canada. Active in the Bandiagara, Gao, and Mopti regions, the project is equipping community-based organizations led by women and internally displaced persons to help out-of-school children get back to learning, and to enhance the quality of education by using playful activities that make lessons fun and engaging.

Blended online and in-person training helps teachers bring play into classrooms in Rwanda

159,000 primary students will benefit from playful learning, thanks to new teacher training developed with support from the LEGO Foundation, Rwanda’s Ministry of Education, the University of Rwanda, the University of Cambridge, and the Rwanda Education Board. Teachers in the blended project are learning how to use play to help students develop core academic and socio-emotional skills. The training was designed with Rwandan teachers to ensure the content would be relevant to real-life classroom contexts and teacher needs.

UPRISERS: NOELLINE'S STORY

“My friends advised me to come back to school. I said to myself, let’s go back for getting a better future.”

– Noelline, 14-year-old Junior Leader, Burundi

Taking her future into her own hands

In Burundi, 51% of children affected by displacement do not go to school. Noelline was one of these children. She was forced to drop out of school when her parents couldn’t afford the fees. Her friends, members of a Right To Play-supported Girls’ Club, encouraged her not to give up on her dreams of an education and, fuelled by their encouragement, she found a way back to the classroom. Now she’s a member of the Girls’ Club too. As a Junior Leader, she performs plays that use humour and real-life examples to challenge gender norms and encourage parents and community leaders to support girls and out-of-school children to return to the classroom.

Noelline and the Girls' Club perform a play for the community that raises awareness of the importance of equal access to education.

In this scene, set in a school office during enrolment season, Noelline plays the role of the Head Teacher. She sits behind a desk as two other characters, a father and son, approach her.

Head Teacher: "Why are you coming to enrol this young boy alone? Where is his sister?"

Father: "The reason is that only boys can go to school. Girls, they are not allowed to go to school."

Head Teacher: "It is very sad to hear what you are saying about girls' education. In fact, a girl is able to do what a boy can do. You are really amazing me with your mindset."

Father: "Whatever you say I cannot accept. I refuse to hear your arguments."

Head Teacher: "How many children do you have?"

Father: "I have two children, a girl and this boy. I came in to enroll this boy, but the girl must stay at home busy with chores."

Head Teacher: "Please go and bring your daughter for enrolment immediately. If you refuse, I will have to call the policeman, and for sure you will be jailed."

Father: "I do not understand what you mean. Why would the police care if my daughter is at home?"

Son: "If the policeman comes to take my father into jail, I will bite him." (The audience laughs as the boy mimes biting a police officer.)

Father: (speaking to his son) "I have my doubts about this Head Teacher; maybe she is not qualified."

Son: "She might be a liar! Maybe she is not a Head Teacher, and she is someone going to the market for her business since it is a market day." (The audience laughs again.)

Head Teacher: "You can believe what you want. But I know that all children, including girls, have a right to education. Your daughter must be allowed to enroll in school!"

GENDER EQUALITY AND GIRLS' WELL-BEING

We improved access to health information and services, conducted research around gender-based violence prevention, and broke down barriers to girls' participation – on the field and in the classroom.

Understanding harmful norms and attitudes that contribute to gender-based violence in Uganda and Lebanon

A three-year research project, conducted in partnership with the Global Women's Institute and the University of the Fraser Valley, engaged with adolescent girls in Uganda and Lebanon to better understand their perceptions of gender-based violence (GBV) and how it affects their lives. The project aims to use the findings to create more targeted and effective resources to combat root causes of GBV and monitor project impact.

By using playful and participatory evaluation approaches that empower participants and limit the risk of retraumatization, researchers collected data that centred the experiences and voices of young people, especially girls. Participants were encouraged to journal using writing prompts, to draw "safe" and "unsafe" community spaces, and to create vignettes to foster discussions. Researchers learned about the gender norms and roles that contribute to GBV, and saw promising indicators that youth-led initiatives can contribute to a shift in social perceptions of GBV.

Improving access to gender-responsive health information and services in Mozambique

The SHARE project is equipping more than 162,000 young people to keep themselves safe from disease, avoid early pregnancy, and become advocates for their health and well-being. At the start of the project, only 50% of young women in project areas felt they could make their own decisions about their sexual activity, use of contraception, and when to access health care. Through Community-Based Mentorship Groups and School Health Clubs, community mentors and health workers supported young people to claim their sexual and reproductive health and rights. The project is offered in partnership with the Forum for African Women Educationalists, FHI 360, WaterAid, and Global Affairs Canada, and also works closely with Mozambique's Ministry of Education and Ministry of Health to ensure long-term sustainability.

Promoting gender equality and girls' empowerment through sports in Senegal

230 coaches – 47% of them women – are empowering youth through soccer, basketball, and other sports, thanks to a training delivered in the RECAF-Jeu project, with the support of Global Affairs Canada. Sports helps youth develop life skills, yet there are few female coaches in Senegalese sports to empower young girls. These coaches are breaking down stereotypes about women's capabilities and places in sports leadership roles, inspiring thousands of girls.

Helping girls stay in school in Tanzania

Right To Play-trained teachers and Girls' Club leaders are helping 4,800 girls in Grades 5 to 7 in the Tarime and Serengeti Districts to stay in school and learn through the Save Her Seat project. Girls in these areas have high dropout rates due to poverty, early marriage, and menstrual health challenges, and only 23% of girls have adequate knowledge of menstrual health and hygiene practices. The project, which is supported by the UK Government and the Liverpool Football Club Foundation, uses play-based activities to help girls develop confidence and perseverance, and learn how to protect themselves from abuse, and early pregnancy and marriage.

PSYCHOSOCIAL SUPPORT

We piloted new projects to better understand how play helps children cope with crisis and foster belonging. We also provided psychosocial support to children experiencing trauma and displacement.

Piloting new programs that support children's well-being through play

For too many children, crisis is the new normal. Climate-related disasters, conflict, and forced displacement put a heavy emotional burden on children and their families. These stressors can inhibit brain development and a child's ability to learn, limiting their future.

Last year, pilot projects in Lebanon and Pakistan used music and movement to support children to process trauma and find ways to communicate about and manage their emotions – skills that are key factors in improving children's psychosocial well-being.

Our Policy Brief, "Promoting Psychosocial Well-being Through the Power of Play", spotlighted learnings from these programs as well as external research on how play helps children develop, learn, and cope with challenging situations, and made policy recommendations for how funders and governments can support this critical area of child protection. ### Fostering youth connection to Secwépemc cultural traditions in Canada

At a Youth Centre in Esk'etemc First Nation, Community Mentors encouraged Indigenous youth to connect to their cultural traditions by making Indigenous regalia, including belts, fans, bustles, skirts and shirts. These activities fostered a sense of belonging and pride in their heritage and created opportunities to learn from their Elders. Community Mentors also supported youth to build confidence and resilience through sports, arts and crafts, outdoor activities, land-based programs, and intergenerational events.

“Through play, children of all ages can explore their feelings, learn problem-solving strategies, and gain a sense of control over their experiences.”

– Dr. Ashley Nemiro, licensed family therapist and mental health and psychosocial expert

Supporting children with disabilities in the Palestinian Territories

Children were able to return to school and are showing positive learning outcomes thanks to the Norad-supported EQIE project. For children with disabilities living in the West Bank and Gaza, accessing safe and inclusive learning environments can be challenging. Educators enhanced classrooms to respond to the needs of children with disabilities, and in Gaza, our team led engagement campaigns that have helped more than 200 children with disabilities enroll in school since the start of the program. 94% of them successfully passed their school exams.

Fostering social dialogue and cohesion in Lebanon

Women and youth are promoting social cohesion in their communities through a new project called We'am, supported by the European Union. Lebanon has experienced significant political, economic, and social upheaval in recent years, leading to increased social tensions. Women and youth are using music, sports, and other play-based approaches to engage more than 950,500 community members over the lifetime of the project through national-level campaigns that will support them to identify the causes of social tensions in the communities and build respect and common ground.

In Lebanon, children who participated in the Music for Emergencies pilot project showed improvements in confidence, self-esteem, communication, and emotional regulation skills.

Marking 21 years of impactful programming in Thailand

Right To Play Thailand brought the power of play to more than 160,000 children and young people across the country between 2002 and 2023. Children in refugee settlements received support to cope with displacement, youth in Bangkok developed confidence and communication skills through sports, and young offenders gained life skills to help them reintegrate into society. Right To Play projects in Thailand ended in 2023, and we are grateful to our staff, our communities, and our partners, including DKSH and the Liverpool Football Club Foundation, for their incredible commitment and support.

SUPPORTING CHILDREN IN EMERGENCIES

When an emergency strikes, children are the first and the most affected. Last year, we were able to quickly respond to three emergencies through the Children's Emergency Fund. Donations to the Fund support children and families with the supplies, spaces, and support they need to cope with trauma and return to learning.

Supporting children in Mozambique affected by Cyclone Freddy

In February, our teams distributed more than 1,000 kits containing toothbrushes, soap, menstrual products, school uniforms, and notebooks to children and families affected by Cyclone Freddy. The major storm destroyed homes, schools, and community spaces, and interrupted children's learning. Our teams also provided assisted devices to children who had lost theirs in the storm.

Keeping children learning in Rwanda

In May, our teams distributed learning and play kits to children and schools affected by heavy flooding and landslides that destroyed homes and schools in the country's western and northern provinces. They also supported the District Authority to facilitate a remedial learning project that gave more than 1,200 grade 6 students a chance to continue learning.

Supporting children in the Palestinian Territories

Donations to the Children's Emergency Fund and funding from Global Affairs Canada and Norad provided thousands of warmth kits and psychosocial support kits to children and families sheltering in tents and schools in Gaza. Children are experiencing trauma and learning loss that will have long-term negative impacts on their well-being and development. We are coordinating with local agencies to assess children's ongoing needs, including children with disabilities, and developing a response that can support them to recover and return to learning when it's possible to do so.

UPRISERS: AIME'S STORY

“Children should know that they are capable of doing anything.”

– Aime, 11-year-old student, Rwanda

Calling for action on climate change in Rwanda

Aime lives in Rubavu, an area that was impacted by devastating floods in 2023. More than 18,000 individuals and families across Rwanda were displaced by the flooding. Aime was deeply affected by seeing friends lose homes and loved ones in the floods, and he wanted to help. The 11-year-old was learning coding as part of Right To Play's Plug in Play project, which gives learners a chance to practise foundational STEM skills like making, tinkering, and coding. When he returned to school, he used a coding program to highlight how a changing climate caused flooding in his community and ways people can protect themselves against the impact of flooding. He won third prize in a national Scratch coding competition for his project!

Global Women's Institute at George Washington University

The Global Women's Institute has developed and piloted "Play-Based Tools and Approaches for Collecting Evidence on Gender-Based Violence Amongst Adolescents in Humanitarian Settings in Uganda and Lebanon", aimed at enhancing Right To Play's ability to measure the impact of their gender-responsive play-based programs on harmful gender norms leading to gender-based violence (GBV). The project contributed to global evidence on the effectiveness of play-based methodologies in addressing Gender-Based Violence and Gender Equity in humanitarian settings.

Bain Capital Children's Charity

Bain Capital Children's Charity (BCCC) was founded to provide financial support to charitable organizations that benefit children and young people in a unique and valuable way. Every Bain Capital employee gets the opportunity to nominate impactful charities for donation, and Right To Play is proud to be a long-standing partner with the Charity.

#startsmall

We are absolutely thrilled to announce a monumental investment from #startsmall, Jack Dorsey's philanthropic initiative. Thanks to this generous grant of $1 million, we can take our girls' health and education programs to new heights!

This transformational gift will be dedicated to funding Right To Play's global girls' education initiatives. With this support, we will positively impact the lives of over 2.7 million children in Africa, Asia, and the Middle East.

Together with #startsmall, we can create a brighter and more equitable future for these incredible young women.

UPRISERS: HANA'S STORY

Inspiring tomorrow's changemakers

Hana moved around a lot growing up on the outskirts of Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. When her parents divorced and she went to a new school, she felt isolated and anxious, and struggled to cope with those big feelings. She heard about a Right To Play program in her community and decided to try it out. That's where she met Coach Nunu. In the program, Nunu led fun games and activities that gave children the chance to develop skills like communication, problem-solving, and leadership. Hana loved it and soon began leading sessions herself. Now Hana is a motivational speaker and youth mentor who dares younger generations of girls to go after their ambitions. She and Nunu reunited in March 2023 to speak at an International Women's Day event held by a nearby school and attended by more than 500 students, teachers, and community members.

SELECT 2023 PARTNERS

We are deeply thankful to the following global partners who have shown significant commitment to Right To Play over the last year by generously providing funding, supporting program implementation, and amplifying awareness of the organization at a global level.
